A leader in a white nationalist hate group finds healing with the people he once hated: a Muslim heart doctor and his town of refugees. Chris Buckley is a husband and father, a veteran, and until recently, a leader in the KKK. He started hating Muslims when the planes hit the Twin Towers but is forced to confront his hate when he receives a text from a Muslim refugee, Dr. Heval Kelli, a cardiologist and Kurdish refugee living in the resettlement community of Clarkston, Georgia (USA). Refuge illustrates the roots of hate, its devastating impacts and ultimately how it can be overcome. More info here.
